DC Staten outlined the process for booking people for people needing a mental health evaluation or who are accused of committing a crime.

- People with mental health They can be detained for 72 hours. They are referred to the hospital for evaluation by a mental health professional. They may be at a mental health facility for 30 days to see if they can be restored to either answer for a crime or be released. (A misdemeanor crime of Shoplifting may end up with a 2 day jail sentence).

- For folks accused of committing a crime, the average stay in jail is 5-7 days. They can be held for 60 -90 days if they were arrested for a crime, however people who commit crimes may only be sentenced to a few days in jail and time served is considered when sentences are handed down.
